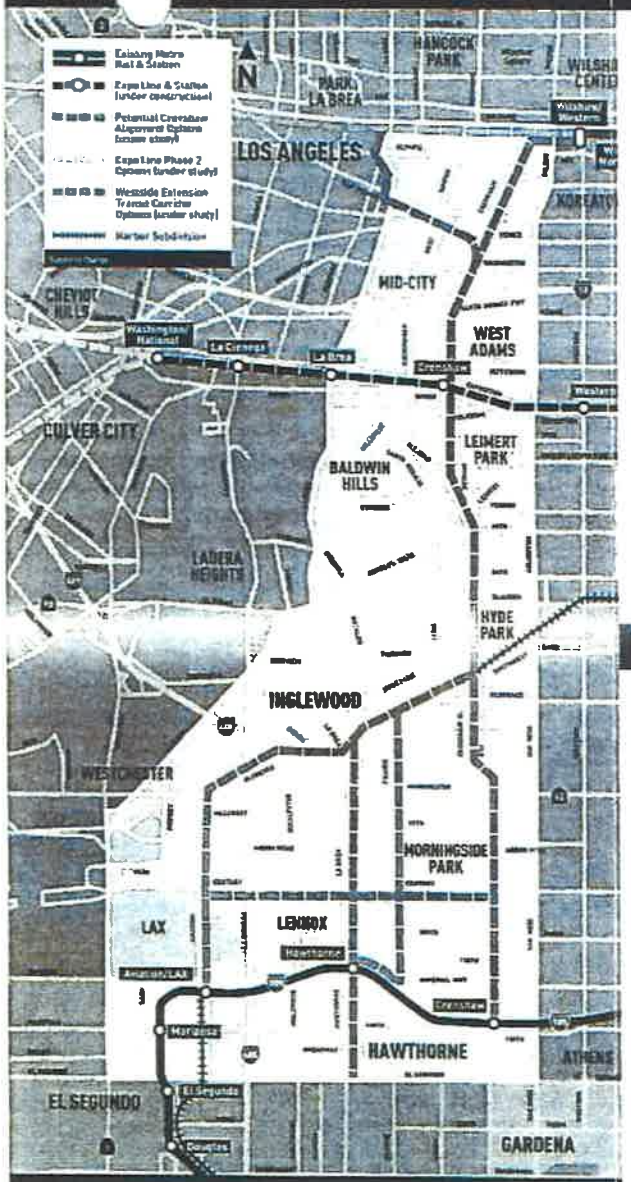
Crenshaw-Prairie Transit Corridor Project Update – February 20, 21 & 23

Reuniones sobre el Corredor de Transporte Crenshaw-Prairie – 20, 21 y 23 de febrero

Crenshaw-Prairie Transit Corridor Study Area



You are invited

You are invited to a Metro project update on the Crenshaw-Prairie Transit Corridor Study. In October 2007, Metro held three public scoping meetings to obtain community input on the scope of the alternatives to be studied in the Alternatives Analysis/Environmental Impact Statement/Environmental Impact Report. Based on feedback from these meetings as well as more detailed technical analysis, some potential routes or alignments have been eliminated from further consideration and others have been added.

Please join us to receive a status report on the project and schedule for future steps. Content presented at these meetings will be identical, so make sure to attend at the time and location most convenient for you.

Draft EIS/EIR

¿Cuales son las alternativas bajo consideración?*

Alternativa de transporte ligero de tren (LRT)
Los trenes LRT funcionan a electricidad conducida desde cables colgantes y pueden funcionar flexiblemente en distintos ambientes. Las líneas Metro Gold, Blue y Green existentes son ejemplos de servicio LRT.

Alternativa de transporte rápido de autobús (BRT)
El BRT es un sistema de transporte integrado que utiliza vehículos de autobús especiales y un diseño de estaciones. Generalmente funciona en vías de transporte y carriles de autobús exclusivos para que los viajes sean más rápidos y fiables.

Metro Orange Line en el Valle de San Fernando es un ejemplo de servicio BRT.

Una opción de no construir y una alternativa de administración de sistemas de transporte (TSM) (mejoramientos al servicio de líneas de autobús existentes) también están bajo consideración.

Vea el mapa para detalles.

Metro está preparando cuatro exhibiciones abiertas al público y audiencias públicas para conocer sus opiniones. Por favor participe.

Es hora de tomar una decisión.

La Medida R proporciona fondos para el Corredor de Transporte Crenshaw. Este proyecto puede ser el motor para el desarrollo económico y el mejoramiento de la calidad de vida en su área. Las características del proyecto incluyen:

- Mejores conexiones de transporte local
- Acceso más fácil a LAX, la zona Oeste y el South Bay
- 3,500 a 7,800 trabajos nuevos
- Crecimiento económico en este corredor vital.

Se ha finalizado un evento importante en el proceso de planificación – el documento medio-ambiental preliminar – y ahora requiere la decisión de la junta Directiva de Metro para pasar a la etapa final de la revisión medio-ambiental.

Para crear el mejor plan para el proyecto del Corredor de Transporte Crenshaw es crítica la participación de la comunidad. Opinión pública ayudará a tratar aspectos claves del proyecto y elegir una alternativa localmente preferida. Sus opiniones serán parte del registro público. Participe y haga que se escuche su voz!

Measure R provides funding for the Crenshaw Transit Corridor project. This project could be an engine for economic development and improved quality of life in your area. Project features include:

- >Improved local transit connections
- >Easier access to LAX, the Westside, and the South Bay
- >3,500 to 7,800 new jobs

A major milestone in the planning process – the draft environmental document – is complete, and now requires a decision by the Metro Board to advance to the final environmental review stage.

To realize the best plan for the Crenshaw Transit Corridor project, robust community participation is critical. Public feedback will help us to address key aspects of the project and choose a locally preferred alternative. Your opinions will be part of the public record. Join us and let your voice be heard!

What are the alternatives being considered?*

Light Rail Transit (LRT) Alternative
LRT trains run on electricity conveyed from overhead wires and can flexibly operate in different environments. The existing Metro Gold, Blue, and Green Lines are examples of LRT service.

Bus Rapid Transit (BRT) Alternative
BRT is an integrated transit system using special bus vehicles and station design. BRT usually runs on exclusive transitways and bus lanes to make trips faster and more reliable. Metro's Orange Line in the San Fernando Valley is an example of BRT service.

A No Build Alternative and a Transportation Sytems Management (TSM) Alternative (service improvements to existing bus lines) are also being considered.

See map for details.*

Metro Media Release

Metro To Hold Public Hearings on Crenshaw Transit Corridor Project

Friday September 11, 2009

Community to Review DEIS/DEIR Document

After two years of studying options for a new transit system for the Crenshaw Corridor, the Los Angeles County Metropolitan Transportation Authority (Metro) is encouraging public comment on draft environmental documents at four public hearings scheduled throughout the community in late September and early October.

These hearings provide the opportunity for the public to comment on the modal alternatives, Light Rail Transit (LRT) and Bus Rapid Transit (BRT), and design options being considered in the Draft Environment Impact Statement/Draft Environment Impact Report (DEIS/DEIR) for a critical transportation project that will serve the communities along the heavily traversed Crenshaw Corridor as well as the South Bay and the region as a whole.

These communities have historically been underserved by transit investments, and the project will not only improve local mobility but also will generate jobs directly and indirectly for the entire region.

The project is a major north-south investment in the Crenshaw District area, potentially providing relief for the I-405 and I-110 Freeways. It also will be a major connection to LAX connecting the Metro Green Line to the south and the Expo Line to the north and potentially to the Wilshire Corridor (bus rapid transit only). The project would provide connections to the entire Metro Rail system and its more than 2,100 peak-hour buses.

The study area for the Crenshaw Corridor Project includes the cities of Los Angeles, Inglewood, Hawthorne, El Segundo and portions of unincorporated Los Angeles County and covers approximately a 33-square mile area from Wilshire Boulevard to the north, El Segundo Boulevard to the South, Arlington Avenue on the east and Sepulveda Boulevard and La Tijera Boulevard/La Brea Avenue on the west. Download: Crenshaw Corridor Project map.

The BRT alternative is 12 miles in length with the travel times estimated at 28 to 30 minutes from the Metro Green Line to the Expo Line or 39 to 41 minutes from Metro

Green Line to Wilshire Boulevard/Western Avenue. There will be eight stations along the alignment with up to four stations north of Exposition Boulevard to Wilshire/Western. Cost is estimated at $500 million to $600 million in today's dollars. The jobs created during the construction phase are estimated to be 3,500.
The LRT alternative will be 8.5 miles in length with the travel times estimated at 20 minutes from the Metro Green Line to Expo Line. This alternative provides for seven stations plus an option for one more. The base cost of the project is estimated at $1.3 billion in today's dollars. Various design options cost between $11 million to $255 million and would add to the total project cost. Job creation is estimated at 7,800.

Funding will come from Measure R, the half-cent sales tax initiative approved by voters last November to improve the region's mobility and create the transportation infrastructure needed to help resolve traffic congestion, air pollution and enhance economic development in Los Angeles County.

Comments received at the upcoming public hearings will help determine the Locally Preferred Alternative (LPA) that will move into final environmental clearance for the Crenshaw Transit Corridor Project. Based on the environmental document and comments received, the Metro Board of Directors will select the LPA later this year.

The complete listing of public hearings is as follows:

- Wilshire United Methodist Church Hall of Fellowship: Wednesday, Sept. 30, 2009, 6-8 p.m.; 4350 Wilshire Blvd., LA, CA 90010; served by Metro Bus lines 20, 720, 210, 710.
- West Angeles Church Crystal Room: Thursday, Oct. 1, 2009, 6-8 p.m.; 3045 Crenshaw Blvd., LA, CA 90016; served by Metro Bus lines 38, 210, 710.
- Inglewood High School Cafeteria: Saturday, Oct. 3, 2009, 10 a.m.-Noon; 231 S. Grevillea Ave., Inglewood, CA 90301; served by Metro Bus lines 40, 111, 115, 212, 740;
- Transfiguration Church Hall: Tuesday, Oct. 6, 2009, 6-8 p.m.; 2515 W. Martin Luther King Jr. Blvd., LA, CA 90008; served by Metro Bus lines 40, 42.

At the beginning of each meeting, there will be an open house format where Metro will provide the public opportunities to speak with project representatives and view study display maps and the environmental document. After a project presentation, including its purpose and need, Metro will request public input through the submission of written and verbal comments.

Metro encourages public participation in the critical process of determining the Crenshaw Corridor's transit future and its relationship to the quality of life in the corridor communities.

Those unable to attend the meetings can submit their comments in writing to Roderick Diaz, Metro Planning Project Manager, Los Angeles County Metropolitan Transportation Authority (Metro), Mail Stop 99-22-3, One Gateway Plaza, Los Angeles, CA 90012.

Comments may also be submitted through e-mail at diazroderick@metro.net or by phone on the project information line at (213) 922-2736. Comments should be received no later than Monday, October 26, 2009 by 5 p.m. More project information and a downloadable version of the DEIS/DEIR are available at www.metro.net/crenshaw

At 97, Dr. Dorothy Height Still Pushing Progress for Blacks, Women

By Pharoh Martin
NNPA National Correspondent

Dr. Dorothy Height sits demurely in an office chair that seems more like a throne as it swallows her 97-year-old frame. Yet, her legacy is overwhelming.

The living icon of civil rights history still comes to work every day in her spacious office that sits in the vista of the U.S. Capitol on Washington's famed Pennsylvania Avenue. It's the headquarters of the National Council of Negro Women of which she is chair and president emerita.

And she has regular work hours, running the day-to-day operations and contacting the major fundraisers of the four million member organization that advocates on issues of African-American women. She's been heading it since 1957.

In an interview with the NNPA News Service, Height talks about how she cares for herself, issues of the day, and her vision for the future.

"Well, while I haven't taken the best care of myself, I haven't abused myself either," Height chuckles in her purple dress and matching church hat. "I think part of it is that I've always had a positive outlook and a sense of purpose in life. I was asthmatic as a child and, even at that time, they didn't think that I could grow up to be 16. And here I am at 97. I think it is, I tried to keep active and study and move ahead. I think working with people has helped me."

That has been a lot of work. Her office is like a shrine to everything she's contributed to society. Like many offices of accomplished executives, her desk is an organized clutter, overrun with stacks of paper, books, a Washington Post, event souvenirs and other items mailed to her as gifts.

There is no computer, just a telephone—and awards everywhere. There's a display case dedicated to all things Delta Sigma Theta, her sorority for which she once served as national president (1946-1957).

Among her major awards is the Presidential Medal of Freedom, the highest citizen award in the nation. There is also the Franklin Delano Roosevelt Freedom From Want Award, a Congressional Gold Medal, and the coveted Spingarn Medal from the NAACP. She's also been enshrined in the National Women's Hall of Fame.

She interprets it all with one word—purpose.

"I think that purpose means that you have some sense that God put you here to do something," Height says. "And once you start on something you discover that that's your life's work. And life's work is very different from having a job or a position or an office. It means that you have a sense of a purpose for your life. That's been my approach. You see, I've been working on civil rights for so many decades. Therefore, I work on civil rights whether I'm the chair of an organization or not."

The room is toasty. People must lean in close and talk loud over the hum of the heater. She won't turn it off, not even for an interview. Height says it's cold. Her executive assistant Christina Toney gives in.

"You'll have to talk loudly," she says.

Even without the hum of the heater, Height's hearing isn't as good as it used to be. But her mind is incredibly sharp for a woman three years shy of a century. She is passionate about the causes for which she works.

Often called "godmother of the women's movement" height is currently focusing her attention on the rising incarceration of African-American females.

"I'm working hard on that," she says.

While the general belief that Black males are having a difficult time is true, Height says people overlook the fact that girls are going into the criminal justice system at a rate higher than boys, with many going in for serious crimes and even leaving children behind.

"If you look at that and follow that pattern—those are the mothers of the future," Height says. "And if you look at that pattern you can not feel hope for the future."

Dr. Height actually has more than one job, despite the fact that she is confined to a wheelchair. Her public service and volunteerism are like second or even third jobs.

She chairs the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, a Washington, D.C.-based conference of civil rights organizations. Her duties at LCCR require her to attend board meetings. The Rankin, Pa. native also travels the country when her health permits. She does speaking engagements and events that require her presence, such as the presidential inauguration of Barack Obama, where she was an honored guest.

BIG SIX

Most people don't see 97. And those that do have usually been retired for decades. Heights says her activism keeps her inspired as she influences the continued fight for civil rights, a fight that she started years ago as a teenager. When she was in high school she entered the Elks' oratorical contest on the Constitution of the United States.

"At 14, I'd become very much involved in understanding the Constitution. I chose to write my oration on the 13th, 14th and 15th amendments of the Constitution," she recalls. "And that was at 14, and today, I'm still trying to make the promise that the 14th amendment makes under law a reality."

More than 73 years later, Height is still developing new vision.

She wants to use NCNW's broad reach to organize women all across the country to help them take more of an active hand in mentoring younger girls.

"I owe a lot to my early childhood and youth the opportunity to be a part of organizations and groups," she said. "We were working on something that was beneficial. I think that's what is needed today."

While the ascension of African-American women as leaders and trailblazers in all fields is booming, Height believes there is still a long way to go.

Of the Big Six civil rights leaders—A. Philip Randolph, Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., Whitney Young, Roy Wilkins, James Farmer, and John Lewis—Dr. Height was the only one not allowed to speak during the 1963 March on Washington—simply because she was a woman.

Today, Height is treated as civil rights royalty, receiving standing ovations and enthusiastic applause just about everywhere she goes.

She says that the present generation must continue the work of those that came before.

"I think that we simply have to keep going; realize that we have to keep working to open the doors that need to be opened," she said. "Today, one of our problems as a people is that so many of the present generation go through the open doors but they don't know how they got opened. We have to help this generation understand how those doors got opened and why they cannot rest until they've got them fully opened."

She explains, "I think today, we have a generation that has to learn how to tackle the issues of the day and do it in such a fashion that it builds more sense of community and strength. We build on our history and try to make tomorrow a better day for our children, and not simply think that one day it will happen. This is a society today based on technology and science and we have to be prepared for this day. That's what is so great about Barack Obama. He was prepared for this day and he's showing it everyday."

But, with all the preparation, her life's work is steeped in the fact that race is still a factor in curtailing individual progress. Height was good friends with her late Civil Rights colleague Dr. Martin Luther King. She'd known him since he was 15-years-old. King's renowned "I Have a Dream" speech probably wouldn't have had happened if it wasn't for Height stepping in. Because of time concerns, the speakers at the 1963 march on Washington didn't want to give the minister the time he needed to say the speech. Every speaker was evenly allotted seven minutes to speak. Height made the case that King should speak last so that he could speak longer. It worked out. She's built a good relationship with another great orator— our 44th president Barack Obama.

Height struggles to compare Dr. King, a Baptist preacher, with the country's first Black president. King was fighting for the country, specifically pertaining to the civil rights of African-Americans and later the poor. On the other hand, Obama as president is a man who must articulate a vision for the nation as a whole.

"I think in that respect, both of them were visionaries," Height says. "I think Dr. King was a good messenger, a good inspiration and a good leader in the sense of helping us all understand that we are more than we think we are and that we are all a part of a world. I think Obama is more like the practitioner who comes along and sees how to get some of that vision realized in terms of the political arena and in the day-by-day lives of people. Dr. King was a drum major for justice. I see Obama trying to turn that justice into a reality in the lives of people."

Legendary Nigerian Writer Moves to Brown University

GIN— Acclaimed Nigerian novelist Chinua Achebe, author of the 1958 classic "Things Fall Apart" has been named to a professorial chair at Brown University, Providence, Rhode Island.

Achebe, 78, will serve in Brown's Department of Africana Studies. "We are honored and thrilled to welcome Professor Achebe to Africana studies and to the Brown community," Tricia Rose, the department's chair, said in a statement. "He is a towering figure in African literature and post-colonial thought. We will benefit enormously from his ongoing insights into the necessity and complexity of global, cross-racial translations and exchanges."

Brown also plans to create a new Chinua Achebe Colloquium on Africa, which Achebe will oversee, an initiative to increase understanding of Africa. The university said the colloquium will get going this fall, and will be kicked off with "a major lecture" by Achebe.

"Things Fall Apart" is perhaps the best-known work of African fiction. It tells the story of Nigeria's Igbo tribe in the early years of British colonialism. The book has sold more than 12 million copies in English.
