D.09-09-047 identified eight tasks that the utilities should address during the 2010 – 2012 Energy Efficiency program cycle. These eight tasks address several strategic planning goals and objectives identified for promoting integrated demand side management in the California Energy Efficiency Strategic Plan. Among these eight tasks is the development of a proposed cost-effectiveness methodology for programs and projects that utilize multiple demand side technology categories such as energy efficiency, demand response, and distributed generation. The purpose of this workshop is to gather public input on a white paper that identifies issues, challenges, and recommendations for development of an integrated demand side cost-effectiveness methodology. The white paper was distributed to the parties of the service lists identified above. A meeting agenda and a list of questions for consideration in preparation for the workshop will be emailed to these same parties prior to the workshop.
